Issue: Jyotiprakash Chakraborty raised a big question that greeneries are calling and we all must feel it to protect it. Isn't it our job to protect the nature rather enjoying it only? As a responsible human being isn't this our duty to put into practices our Sustainable Development Goals of United Nations for better sake of our own future and this is going to be our topic for discussion on this Earth day 22 of April of 2023.

Rule: I am using this chart of UN-SDGs through which every month we asks everyone questions for discussion. This chart divides our responsibilities in three heads. Firstly, our societal duty includes poverty, hunger, health & wellbeing, education, gender equality, water and sanitation. Secondly, our economical duty includes building renewable energy system, work and economic growth, industry and infrastructure, inequalities, sustainable cities, consumption and protection. Thirdly, our environmental duties includes climate change, water ecosystems, land ecosystems. All of these goals or heads of duties are relating to partnership of goals that mostly depends on Goal-16 means institutional setting of peace and justice.

UN-SDGs: I want to discuss this at three layers as our life-style on planet Earth is based on these compulsory layers which are as follows:

- Individual Level: We born on this planet Earth to fulfill our desires, but when we failed to do so that causes institutional setting of peace and justice due to individual contribution. Think about a life where a child is born with lack of freedom, proper access to education, or required money. In many situations, this lacking are tried to be hidden through traditionalism. This raise anger for the family, community that turns into frustration of life and that lead us to commit crime or break the institutional setting of peace and justice. These is a big question whether individual commit crime for failure of institutional setting of peace and justice or institutional setting of peace and justice fails for individual actions? My answer is very simple that individual action causes failure of institutional setting of peace and justice at large. From Stone Age to post-modern age, human beings enslave themselves through competition. We born to live our life, but generally we look at others' lives and imitate them. Sometimes we pressure our successors to engage into competition, but we never enjoy moments of life in that way. We must stood first in the cue to make our teachers, friends, family proud, but we never thought that how many moments we lost by engaging ourselves in these competition? Afterwards, when we won the race, then we find ourselves still unhappy because then our teachers, friends, family want more from us because we are race winners. We are race winners and so we get involved into the race again and again after winning another race when we see our teachers, friends, family demand for more, then we get frustrated with our life that whatever we do, nothing is here we have in our material life to satisfy others. Then relation breaks and we go alone, but we lost ourselves already because we build up a mentality of competition and that made metabolic changes in our health that we cannot live without having competition in our life. This brings dissatisfaction to our life and we start engaging violating rights of others.

- National Level: To stop this engagement of violation of others life, human being started developing different institutional setting of peace and justice. The most common institution since Stone Age is politics, law, and business for the upliftment of the society. As population arose, or rigidity arose in the name of traditionalism, or colonization arose overtime, the control of local leaders started getting weaken. When at Stone Age we had a very few Tort cases in England, that brought further laws like Magna Carta, Bill of Rights, Adversarial litigation system overtime to protect the rights of innocent people. This is because when individuals started violating others rights, then institutional setting of peace and justice came in, but when these institutional settings got into the hands of those individuals who are already frustrated with their life due to violation of their own right and revenge or vengeance to violate others' right is nothing new for them, then they started misuse of power through these institutional setting and that causes failure of this level. Institutional settings are fitting between themselves to stop corruption or other levels of crime than bringing satisfaction to life of individuals.
- UN/EU/International Level: When national level fails, then people look at international level, but also fail because of the same reason. For example, members of UNSC did not accept the bindingness of principles from English Common Laws because they had problems with each others. At that time they non acceptance of this principle seems a winning at competition of life, but this is the cause of failure of UN-SDGs currently. We discussed at our last paper that British colonisiam was not that very bad. Some people tortured, but their "Heroic Leaders" saved poor people from rich leaders. Ban on Sati pratha or making laws for marriage of widows were some examples of their contributions. After cessation of colonization, we lack those heroic leaders. Moreover, UN-SDG is not binding directly on any country. So how can a country or why should a country can focus on some non-binding Agenda when they are already under intra-state modern war situation? They are in poverty, mental stress with no home, shelter or security of life. Their rights are getting violated every day. How can they think to build up water treatment plant? The people of these countries are moving out to develop countries and putting pressure on them.

It does not matter what level of institutional setting of peace and justice we build, but if we do not stop competition with each other, then Mother Nature will destroy all us.

This is the time when we need to save our nature. See the nature, feel it, see it and help others to feel it. By this I mean we need those heroic leaders back to inspire those who want to build up for their society as it was done before formation of United Nation. Without the contribution of heroic leaders to bring changes at human mind, no crime can be reduced.

The nature is calling, the river is dancing. We human being need to enjoy our life in this way. Why this is not possible now for us? What is wrong within us? What if we do not involve in competition with others? What if we only focus on our own needs and ambitions without bringing harm to others? What can give you best peace of mind, money, competition, or living your life as your own and let others as theirs?

We are not only putting our human life in danger, but also putting environment in danger. Mother Nature is in danger, but it knows how to destroy you before you destroy her completely.

Conclusion: Be a responsible human being and the day people will start living their life as their own and let others as their choice, then institutional setting of peace and justice and partnership goals of UN-SDGs will get success in its every country.
